Mission Statement

The guiding purposes of National Braille Press are to promote the literacy of blind children through braille and to enable blind people to participate better in their work, family, and civic affairs through information.

Dear friends,

In this year of my retirement, after 32 years, I want to give an especially hearty thanks to our donors, who have not only made our services to blind readers possible, but, quite frankly, have made my successes here possible.

In the late ’70s, we built our braille transcription and pressing capacity to serve other organizations wishing to communicate with their braille-reading constituents.

In the ’80s we reinvigorated our publishing program. We added our Children’s Braille Book Club, Syndicated Columnists Weekly, and a steady flow of information pamphlets and books helpful to blind people in all sorts of activities—from operating computers and cooking, to baby care and job-seeking.

In the ’90s we became aware of the needs of blind schoolchildren, and started our braille textbook transcription service, now serving children in all 50 states and Canada with educational materials including the all-important standardized achievement tests. In the current decade, we added our ReadBooks! Because Braille Matters program, to seek out and serve families with preschool blind children across the country, to broaden awareness on the part of the parents of the importance of braille literacy, and to stimulate early reading by the children.

As I head out to travel, read, and stay en rapport with my friends and family, I will always be fond of and continue my relationship with National Braille Press. Thank you.

I like reading for fun. I can read for a very long time, and I don’t get bored. I like fiction, non-fiction, and biographies, but I favor fiction. At first, I didn’t really care about Harry Potter, because I heard it was a fantasy book, but I love it now, because the author is really good. She makes you feel the way the characters feel. In addition to Harry Potter, some of my favorite books have been The Lion, The Witch and the Wardrobe by C.S. Lewis, Where the Red Fern Grows by Wilson Rawls, and The City of Ember by Jeanne DuPrau.

My Mom and Dad have always been there for me, and have helped me to be successful at school. My older sister Laura and I have always been close. She used to read to me when I was little, and now, she helps me with my math homework. When other kids have told me that I can’t do things, my sister makes sure I know that I can. We used to share a room at our old house, and the only problem was that I couldn’t read late at night, because the noise of my fingers moving over the braille would keep my sister awake.

I’m not exactly sure what I want to do when I grow up, but I really like animals, so maybe a veterinarian or a dog trainer. I think reading will get me somewhere, and even though we get less reading time in class as we get older, I’m definitely going to keep reading outside of school. I’m really glad National Braille Press gives me the opportunity to choose which books I want to read.
As parents, our primary long-term goal is for our children to be happy and to be productive members of society. My wife Rasa and I have high expectations for both of our sons, and have no doubt that they will attend university and pursue careers of their choice. Though they are both blind, we want Vejas (ten) and Petras (six) to have all the experiences that sighted children have.

One of the critical steps to making this happen is ensuring that they are reading at the same level as their sighted peers. Both boys are curious and have positive attitudes, and though they have distinctly unique personalities, they share an early love of reading. Vejas and Petras have participated both local and national reading programs every year since they were two or three years old. Vejas won first place in his age group in the 2004-2005 national Braille Readers Are Leaders contest, as a second grader having read over 12,000 braille pages in three months. By the end of third grade Vejas was already reading at over 180 braille words per minute.

A sobering statistic I’ve found says that only around one third of blind adults are employed. Of that third, 93% read braille, which reaffirms the imperative that blind children must learn and be proficient Braille readers. I believe children should be exposed to braille very early on, at home, well before preschool starts. Both of our boys have been searching for the raised dots of braille on book pages since about nine months of age. At three and a half, Petras would follow along in braille books as they were read to him, even though he couldn’t decipher all of the words yet.

These days, Petras enjoys National Braille Press’s Phonics series, while Vejas relishes both embossed and electronic Braille versions of chapter books and magazines. This summer will be full of reading, surfing and rock climbing. I believe that blindness itself is NOT the handicap; rather, not giving kids the appropriate braille skills creates the handicap—the handicap of illiteracy.

“i believe children should be exposed to braille very early on, at home, well before preschool starts.”

The Verizon Foundation and the employees of Verizon have been supporting braille literacy since 2000, most recently with their sponsorship and participation in the 2007 Vision 5K Run and Walk. Verizon’s Center for Customers with Disabilities and the DIAL (Disability Issues Awareness Leaders) group formed a team of walkers led by Sara Coracero, Outreach Manager. Sara states:

“Every day we are working to improve the lives of people with disabilities and make the world a more even playing field so it’s natural for our work to spill over into our private time.”

Verizon’s support of literacy initiatives prompted employee and braille reader, Jeffrey Pledger, to highlight braille during the Verizon’s Season's Readings literacy campaign. Jeffrey’s idea to include braille literacy in this campaign helped raise money to provide braille books to several libraries for the blind as well as provide Children’s Braille Book Club subscriptions to blind children across the country.

The Daniels Fund believes in equal opportunities for all students so becoming a funder of National Braille Press’s ReadBooks! Because Braille Matters program was a natural fit. Inspired by our reading event by members of the Denver Nuggets with blind students from the Anchor Center in Colorado, the Daniels Fund has become a supporter. With its headquarters in Colorado, The Daniels Fund has visited our Boston-based braille publishing house and has engaged us in an energizing discussion about the education and literacy needs of blind children nationwide.

“Imagine a world where people give of themselves simply because they want to. Now, instead of imagining this kind of world, do your part in making it happen. Make a charitable donation. Volunteer your time to improve your community. Give back to the world that gives so much to you.”

Bill Daniels
Blue Cross Blue Shield’s BlueCrew, a group of employee volunteers that number 1,000 members, has made quite an impact on National Braille Press’s braille book production recently. This enthusiastic volunteer group has been a supporter of the Press’s corporate volunteer program and has helped us affix braille labels on two books for pre-readers, Bob the Builder and Snuggle Puppy.

Blue Cross Blue Shield has also been a dedicated supporter of the Press’s Hands On! Books For Blind Children gala as well as the 2007 Vision 5K Run and Walk. They have helped raise both funds and awareness about the capabilities of blind people and the need to provide literacy and educational tools to inspire independence and success.

“As part of our civic and community commitments in Massachusetts, BCBSMA is proud to lend its support to organizations that improve the lives of our fellow citizens across the state. National Braille Press is a leader in promoting literacy of children who are blind, and we are proud to support the work they do to help these children achieve self sufficiency and independence.”

National Braille Press celebrated its second annual Hands On! Books for Blind Children gala on September 27, 2006, at the State Room in downtown Boston.

Tom Sullivan, CEO of Lumber Liquidators, Tom Werner, Chairman of the Boston Red Sox and Joe Campanelli CEO, of Sovereign Bank, led an inspirational evening that raised $727,000 for the Hands On! campaign. Nearly 450 guests were inspired by awardee Cindy Rogers who spoke about learning braille later in life, and by children Albano Berberi and Marisa Parker who read stories to the crowd. Ann Romney, first lady of Massachusetts also graciously read Mrs. Laura Bush’s acceptance letter for the Hands On! award that was given to the first lady of the United States. Hands On! aims to eliminate the literacy gap that separates blind children from the mainstream.

National Braille Press is excitedly preparing for this year’s Hands On! gala. Tom Sullivan and Joe Campanelli will be sharing co-chair duties again and will be joined by Jim Roosevelt, President and CEO of Tufts Health Plan, and Jonathan Kraft, President and COO of The Kraft Group. Guests will be delighted as Emmy Award-winning comedian Jay Leno hosts this very special evening at the InterContinental Boston on Friday, October 26, 2007.
Roberto Clemente Field, Boston - June 2, 2007  The success of our revitalized Vision 5K Run and Walk was due this year to the corporate sponsors, the passionate teams of runners and walkers, and the friends and family who made donations to those teams. Below we would like to recognize those sponsors and donors who have helped advance the mission of National Braille Press through their contributions to Vision 5K.

* Due to the collaborative nature of the Vision 5K, our process for tracking donors was a challenge this first year. We sincerely hope that this list is complete and apologize if we missed any donors—please know that your support is very much appreciated!
Francis Ierardi, a determined Italian immigrant and braille reader, was inspired in the 1920s by a world that embraced improvement and a decade that marked many of the 20th century’s great inventions.

“I realized for the first time how inadequate was the source of information for those who could not read daily newspapers or weekly reviews, [who] were dependent upon others to keep them posted on what was going on about them.” So, in 1927, he launched The Weekly News, the first broadly distributed, general newspaper at least in the Western Hemisphere. He distributed it worldwide and he founded National Braille Press to publish it.

Ever since then, we have been working tirelessly to help blind children and adults achieve self-sufficiency and independence by publishing practical information in braille and by advocating for literacy—because the ability to read and write, in braille or print, is a critically important gateway to opportunity.

What we’ve accomplished since 1927:

Here are some rough estimates, just for fun, of what we’ve created over the last 80 years:

- 600,000 tactile graphics
- 2 billion braille pages
- 3.507 trillion braille dots
- 2,500+ volunteers

What we’ve accomplished in 2007:

- We produced 21,789 children’s books in braille, 4% more than last year.
- We brailed 553,382 textbook and test pages for blind schoolchildren.
- Our braille publications reached 21,897 braille readers in the United States.
- We launched a library exhibition, The Magic of Braille, which included a history of Louis Braille and his literacy innovation and featured our magnum opus, Louis Braille: A Touch Of Genius, in both braille and fully illustrated print editions.
- We delivered Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows to braille readers across the country on July 21—the same day that the print edition was released.
- We were approved, after a rigorous application process, for a specialized workforce training grant for LEAN manufacturing.
- We began implementing the preliminary phases of our new Strategic Plan.
- We published 46 new titles of which 7 were original publications with blind authors.

Thank you to all our donors for fiscal year 2007!

The publishing, information access, and outreach programs of National Braille Press depend substantially on philanthropic support. Every person’s gift, whether $1 or $100,000, makes a significant difference in the lives of blind children and adults who benefit from the work of the Press. The names listed below represent those individuals, corporations, and foundations who have made contributions at the level of $50 or more. These charitable contributions together make up nearly one-third of our operating budget. Many of our donors care about literacy for everyone—blind and sighted; nonetheless, we are honored that a full 33 percent of our donors are braille readers who also benefit from our braille publications.

Francis B. Ierardi Founders Society

Gifts of $1,000 and above We honor our founder for fulfilling the dream of providing blind people with the tool for good citizenship—current news. He established and founded the National Braille Press in 1927 in order to publish the first braille weekly newspaper in America, The Weekly News. And now, 80 years later, we are still providing practical information in braille for readers throughout the country and the rest of the English-speaking world.
